New York city especially was slow to awake to the necessity of action in this respect. Her citizens, who were devoted to commercial pusiness and absorbed in the pursuit wants of the masses. Even then, it was only after long discussion in the public press and in the city Council that the people were aroused to the importance of the subject, and convinced of the practicability of the project. The great Central Park is the result of their efforts. Though the primeval forest trees had long since disappeared, and rugged rocks, with scarcely a sprig of vegetation, constituted almost entirely the surface of the proposed park, an area of eight hundred acres has been converted in little more than twelve years into one of the most beautiful and attractive one of the most beautiful and attractive places on the globe.
